Bangladesh is predominantly a riverine country, with three major river systems—Padma, Jamuna, and Meghna—shaping its fertile plains. It is home to the Sundarbans, the world’s largest mangrove forest and a UNESCO World Heritage Site. The country experiences a subtropical monsoon climate, with hot, humid summers and mild winters.

Bangladesh has a vibrant culture influenced by its Bengali roots. The nation celebrates diverse festivals like Pohela Boishakh (Bengali New Year), Eid, and Durga Puja. Traditional music, dance, and literature play significant roles in daily life. The national anthem "Amar Shonar Bangla" was written by Nobel laureate Rabindranath Tagore.

Bangladesh is known for its fast-growing economy. The garment industry is the largest contributor to exports, followed by jute, leather, and seafood. The country is also seeing rapid growth in ICT and mobile financial services.
